Notification of Infectious Diseases

Given the nature of our work, you must inform your manager and copy in Human Resources immediately if you are suffering from or have symptoms of a notifiable infectious disease, e.g. mumps, measles, chicken pox, e coli, vomiting or diarrhoea or if you have been in close contact with someone who has these symptoms.

If you feel unwell and have tested positive for a transmitable infections virus (such as the Flu or COVID) please follow the short-term sickness policy. There are no additional requirements.

If you have food poisoning, vomiting or diarrhoea you must staff off work until you've not been sick or had diarrhoea for two days/48 hours.

If you have had close contact with someone who is unwell, but you are feeling healthy you can come into work as usual. Please tell your manager as there may be colleagues who would need to be informed.

If you have been off work with an infectious illness, you must contact your manager and tell Human Resources before returning to work to make sure it is safe to continue working. We may ask you to see advice from your doctor.
